

Chinese Restaurant

Harry is a 30 year old bachelor who meets with his Yacht Club every month. His Yacht Club is looking to have their annual benefit dinner. Harry is in charge of ordering the food to be delivered. He needs to have it there by 7:30 p.m. for an 8 o'clock dinner. The club agreed upon chinese food. Harry needs to make sure the restaurant delivers and they can accommodate food for 200 people and how much the delivery fee will be. He visits the website of the restaurant to get their phone number and sees that there is an option for delivery. He enters his general information and his preference for time of delivery, party size, and location. He continues on to the next page that shows him the menu where he can select the quantity of each dish he wants. Above the menu is a helpful suggestion for his party size. It tells him the amount of apps, entrees, and desserts he should order. Under the menu is a special request option where you can leave specific comments about the order or request allergy lists, etc.

Jenny and her friends are looking forward to going to see the blue man group in two weeks. They want to go out to dinner before their 9 o'clock show. She finds a restaurant online that is near by and agrees with her friends that they will get chinese food. Since the show is on a saturday night she wants to make sure they are able to get a table for 6. She goes on to their website and sees an option to make reservations at the top of the page. She goes to the reservations page and enters in all of her contact and reservation information. She sees the option to request booth seating and she reserves it. She also notices when she returns to the home page that she can view the menu. She finds that they have a pretty good amount of gluten free food which is perfect because one of her friends has a gluten allergy.
